Employers Liability, Workmen's Compensation and Liability Insurance Mar 04 2021 Excerpt from *Employers Liability, Workmen's Compensation and Liability Insurance: The Distinction Between the Liability to Pay Compensation and the Liability for Damages for Injuries Which Are Not Within the Compensation Act of New York State; State Compensation Insurance Compared With Liability Insurance by Stock Companies and Mutual The Workmen's Compensation Law of the State of New York (Chapter 67 of the Consolidated Laws, as enacted by Chapter 816 of the Laws of 1918 and re-enacted by Chapter 41 of the Laws of 1914, with amendments) made a radical change in relation to the liability of employers for damages because of accidental injuries. The result has led to much confusion between injuries which are compensatable and injuries which may be made the basis of damage suits. Part I of this work is intended to relieve this confusion. The compensation act is explained and cases of dual liability and optional remedies, as well as cases which are not covered in any manner by the compensation law, are classified and supplemented by such annotations of authorities as are available. Part II is devoted to the subject of compensation and liability insurance. Here again confusion exists more particularly in relation to state insurance covering the payment of compensation. Nothing has been attempted in this connection except to show the nature of this and other forms of insurance, to explain the so-called immunity claimed on behalf of State Fund insurance, and to point out that the State Insurance Fund is created for the purpose of insuring employers against the payment of compensation, and under its contract or insurance policy, only insures against compensation liability. Part III contains the workmen's compensation law as amended, including the amendments made by the Legislature of 1916. It is annotated with all decisions of the Courts under the New York act and with decisions of the Workmen's Compensation Commission and its successor, the State Industrial Commission. Employers Liability for Personal Injuries to Their Employees (Classic Reprint) Aug 29 2020 Excerpt from Employers Liability for Personal Injuries to Their Employees The legislature at its last session directed an investigation of the subject of the liability of employers to workmen for injuries received while in the discharge of their duty, and a consideration of what changes, if any, are needed in the existing laws relative to such liability. A careful investigation of the law and facts which bear upon the subject has been made, and it has been fully considered in its various phases, with especial care, for the first time, so far as known in this country. It is a subject which, in all its varied relationships, is by no means easy of comprehension. It is fruitful of embarrassments. And hedged about with difficulties, but at the same time of no inconsiderable consequence to the welfare of the community. During the nine years ending with 1881 there were, according to the Railroad Gazette, persons killed, and injured, in the United States, on the railroads alone; and of these, were killed and injured on the railroads of this Commonwealth. A large majority of both the killed and injured were employees. Of those killed in this Commonwealth, 358 were of this class, while of those injured there were (553. During the year 1881 alone, 72 employees were killed and 128 injured in this Commonwealth. When one single branch of employment causes such an annual sacrifice as this, it seems to be time to consider whether something cannot be done to prevent it.
