Excerpt from Fourth Report of the Agriculture of Massachusetts: Counties of Franklin and Middlesex This constitutes my Fourth and last Report on the Agriculture of Massachusetts. The Legislature having, in their wisdom, seen fit to repeal the act authorising the survey before its completion, it only remains for me to wrap my robes about me and retire, leaving behind me my blessing for my good old mother, the Bay State. It is a small offering; but there is a treasury, where the mite of the poverty-stricken, if it be the gift of a true heart, will not be disdained even among* the splen did offerings of the af?uent. I have given, in this case, an examination only of the coun ties of Franklin and Middlesex, with occasional references to other counties; but I have treated very fully the topics con nected particularly with the agriculture of these two counties, such as the raising and fattening of neat cattle, sheep husbandry, dairy stock, the keeping and fattening of swine, the cultivation of hops, and the reclaiming of peat and bog meadows. I have a large amount of materials on hand in relation to these and to other counties, which - I have examined, which I should have been glad to compile and present; but after the resolution re pealing the survey, I have not been without fears that I may have transcended my proper limits in giving as much as I have. Should this be the case, I can only throw myself on the can dor of an enlightened, and therefore liberal community. The Government needs strong budgetary systems to be able to control and manage public spending and to provide high quality public services that offer value for money to the taxpayer. The 2010 Spending Review set a four-year spending total for each department and focused on reducing public spending and delivering the coalition Government's programme. The Treasury managed the Spending Review by collating bids from departments and challenging submissions. The process built on the experience of previous CSRs and was better managed, however concerns remain. Departments and the Treasury failed to take a longer term view on spending, making cuts in those budgets that were easiest to cut. For instance, whilst Treasury improved assessment processes to be able to rank capital projects, the overall level of capital investment was cut. Resource expenditure as a whole will increase in nominal terms, albeit at a much slower rate. There were gaps in data which made it difficult to compare options or benchmark spending proposals. There were no incentives for departments to collaborate on cross-government issues. There was no evidence of clear thinking on how one decision to save money in one budget area might lead to an increase in expenditure elsewhere. Decisions on where to spend or cut rest with Ministers and cannot be divorced from the political process. But these decisions need to be informed by rational analysis. Officials must do more to provide Ministers with reliable and comparable information to help them weigh up the effect of different spending options. and relevant. 400 million tonnes of waste is produced in England and Wales from industrial, commercial and household sources, with 375 million tonnes produced in England alone. Following on from its previous report on waste management issues (HCP 385-I, session 2002-03, ISBN 0215010876) published in May 2003, the Committee's report focuses on the progress being made to meet targets for recycling, and the impact of the EU Landfill Directive on reducing the amount of waste sent to landfills, particularly in hazardous waste landfill capacity. Findings include that waste policy has a lower public profile than many other environmental issues, and its development is hindered by a lack of quality data. Concerns are raised about the level of hazardous waste that is unaccounted for, following the ending of co-disposal of hazardous and non-hazardous waste in the same landfill. Government funding for research into new treatment technologies is welcomed, but more investment is needed; and the planning system is a key influence on the country's waste management capacity. The Committee also recommends that the Landfill Tax should be increased to £35 per tonne; and that the introduction of local authority schemes to promote household waste recycling should be left at the discretion of local councils, with variable charging schemes only introduced if this can avoid disadvantaging low-income families. Big data is already a UK success story but it has huge unrealized potential, both as a driver of productivity and as a way of offering better products and services to citizens. The Committee warns that existing data is nowhere near fully exploited - companies are analysing just 12% of their data, and if 'data-phobe' businesses made good use of their data they could increase UK productivity by 3%. The Government can also do more to make its databases 'open' and to share them with businesses, and across Government departments to improve and develop new public services. A big data revolution will need action, the Committee warns, on digital skills and infrastructure, and also on people being able to give their informed consent for how their personal data is used. The Committee warns that the digital skills gap is approaching crisis levels, and that this not only has economic implications but also puts the quality and security of this data at risk. There are risks, as well as opportunities, from big data. The benefits therefore have to be weighted against the potential loss of privacy and the risks of the data being lost or misused. Seeking to balance the potential benefits of processing data and people's justified privacy concerns will not be straightforward. Fourth report of Session 2010-11 : Documents considered by the Committee on 20 October 2010, report, together with formal Minutes Excerpt from Fourth Report of the Forest Commissioner of the State of Maine, 1902 The work was divided according to the State water sheds, more attention being paid to the four great river systems, the St. John, Penobscot, Kennebec and Androscoggin, than to the minor systems near the coast. Certain territory was assigned to each explorer. The explorers travelled many miles, personally looked over some of the townships and interviewed surveyors who had made actual surveys, and obtained figures from the owners of the land. With the understanding that the estimates furnished were to be used in getting at an aggregate of the stand ing timber in the State and not separate townships, the owners of the land have invariably assisted in the search for information on the subject. To them and to all others who have aided in this work I feel greatly indebted. In many cases the estimates of the growth on townships have been verified by obtaining figures from more than one explorer familiar with the territory, and then perhaps getting the owner's figures to aid in basing the actual stand. This method meant a much more accurate estimate than could otherwise be obtained. As it is well understood it would be an almost endless under taking and mean an outlay of many thousands of dollars to get an actual survey and exploration of the whole State, but by the method employed I believe the estimates obtained to be as nearly correct as it is possible by any means outside of an actual survey, and much nearer than any estimate ever obtained in the past.
